

Peak District Weekend

Friday 24th to Monday 27th May

Climb, eat unfeasibly large breakfasts, drink Lurcher

Some free, simple advice – ignore at your peril:

- Don't ask for lager. Seriously – just don't.
- The Yondermann's biggest breakfast is not for you.
- Switch your phone off in the pub.
- Car keys do not make good locks on toilets.
- Grit is grippy, some limestone isn't.

Yondermann: The shandy-drinkers' breakfast.

This is it – the biggie – the most popular weekend of the club calendar. The Peak weekend has a bit of everything with, most importantly, more top-class climbing than you can shake a stick at.

Slither of cake reserved for Bowler and Sharp.

Intersperse the climbing with food from Julie at The Yondermann Cafe, cake from myriad eating establishments and gear purchasing from Outside in Hathersage.

There is also the small matter of the Three Stags' Heads, arguably the finest public house in England. Pat and Geoff serve quality ale in, how shall I put it, an eccentric setting. Don't take my word for it – here are quotes from some satisfied customers: "H-H-Heey, thish beersh goooood."

"'m compleeetly sober – only had a leetle itty-bitty glass of Lurchy-lurchy."

"Well, hellooo, beautiful..." "Gerroff my dog."

Black Lurcher: "A complex grist of Maris Otter Pale Ale malt and wheat malt with roasted barley and chocolate malt. Fuggles Hops give just the right amount of bitterness. Liquoricey yet dark and fruity. Molasses and bitter chocolate with a bitter coffee, warm, alcoholic finish."

Personally, I think the bloke who wrote that has drunk too much of his own product. Lurcher is more like death on a black stick, but each to their own.
